The Workers World Party (WWP) is a Marxist–Leninist communist party in the United States founded in 1959 by a group led by Sam Marcy.<sup>[3][4][5]</sup> WWP members are sometimes called Marcyites. Marcy and his followers split from the Socialist Workers Party (SWP) in 1958 over a series of long-standing differences, among them their support for Henry A. Wallace's Progressive Party in 1948, their view of People's Republic of China as a workers' state, and their defense of the 1956 Soviet intervention in Hungary, some of which the SWP opposed.<sup>[6][7][8]</sup>

Back in the U.S., he resumed his education at Northeastern University but dropped out.<sup>[10]</sup> He returned to Lynn in 1948 and the next year joined the Socialist Workers Party (SWP) to recruit at the GE River Works there, adopting the name "Lyn Marcus" for his political work.<sup>[32][10]</sup> He arrived in New York City in 1953, where he worked as a management consultant.<sup>[33]</sup> In 1954 he married Janice Neuberger, a member of the SWP. Correct, he had diplomatic cover, a legal officer, a case officer, with last known rank of Lt. Colonel, supposedly once they become Ambassador they are no longer case officers, meaning no more handling their own recruited agents, but they never leave the field.

Russia-based Fidel Castro Foundation launches magazine in Cuba

Havana, Dec 14 (Prensa Latina) The Fidel Castro Ruz Center in Havana hosted the launch of the Cuba magazine, published by the Russia-based Foundation named after the historic leader of the Cuban Revolution.

December 14, 2024 00:16

The magazine is inspired by a publication printed by Prensa Latina News Agency in the Soviet era, with the same name and a similar purpose: to make Cuba's reality known among Russian-speaking people and promote bilateral relations. Leonid Savin, president of the board of directors of the Fidel Castro Foundation in Moscow, said on Friday.

According to the Russian researcher, journalist and activist, Cuba has a long history of struggles, beginning in the 19th century, and is an example of ideological continuity and resistance, which arouses great interest in his country.

This first issue, presented just two weeks ago in the Russian capital, contains articles by Cuban and Russian experts on Cuba's economic situation, its challenges and prospects, as well as analyses of the media war sponsored by its external enemies.

The magazine also contains an article on National Hero José Martí, by Marlene Vázquez, director of the Center on Martí's Studies in Havana.

Treasury Sanctions Iranian Organizations and Individuals Supporting Intelligence and Cyber Targeting of U.S. Persons

February 13, 2019

WASHINGTON – Today, the U.S. Department of the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) designated an Iran-based entity that organizes international conferences that supported the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps-Qods Force's (IRGC-QF's) efforts to recruit and collect intelligence from foreign attendees, including U.S. persons, and four associated individuals. OFAC also designated a separate Iran-based entity and six associated individuals involved in the targeting of current and former U.S. government and military personnel as part of a malicious cyber campaign to gain access to and implant malware on their computer systems.

"Treasury is taking action against malicious Iranian cyber actors and covert operations that have targeted Americans at home and overseas as part of our ongoing efforts to counter the Iranian regime's cyber attacks," said Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin. "Treasury is sanctioning New Horizon Organization for its support to the IRGC-QF. New Horizon hosts international conferences that have provided Iranian intelligence officers a platform to recruit and collect intelligence information from attendees, while propagating anti-Semitism and Holocaust denial. We are also sanctioning an Iran-based company that has

Speech by the President of American University in Moscow Edward Lozansky on the round table "Five principles of Russian foreign policy: multipolarity as inevitability"

Firstly, I want to thank Vladimir Ivanovich Dobrenkov for this meeting. The fact is that it was here, at the social faculty of Moscow State University, that American University began. 18 years ago, when we were all very naive and believed that with the collapse of communism, Russia would be met with hugs in the West, this was the first idea of – the creation of American University, and everything happened here on the second floor of this building. The university developed and then became part of a large international university. Vladimir Ivanovich, thank you.

Alexander Gelievich Dugin said that the Americans are pragmatists, all kinds of philosophical reasoning are far from them, they need to talk about more specific things; but here are the neocons, whom now, in general, are scolded, they are more likely ideologists. To some extent, they resemble Marxists who believe in some ideas.

I want to add that there are also ordinary conservatives to which I consider myself. These are people like Ron Reagan, Margaret Thatcher ... I would add the names of Patrick Buchanan, Paul Wairik, Donald Duval and others. These are the pillars of American conservatism. And I must say that of those who carefully read the American press or articles on the Internet, many notice that these conservatives, right-wing anti-communists, of course, first of all, unexpectedly took a position, I would not say the pro-Russian, – but at least they say that what happened in Georgia is the fault of the United States. And before, these people understood that it was better to have Russia on its side. There were a huge number of delegations here, some of which I managed to organize, where they called for Russia to join NATO, to actively participate in the creation of the missile defense system which would be much more effective if Russia and America worked together. And in this regard, I would say that Russia has a more favorable position than the Soviet Union, which relied in America on radical leftists, on the Communist Party, which had no influence in American society, and therefore all these means that were invested in support of the communist movement, were thrown into the wind.

NewsFront is a Crimea-based disinformation and propaganda outlet that worked with FSB officers to craft a narrative that undermined the credibility of a news website advocating for human rights. Part of NewsFront was to utilize Alexander Malkevich, who is also being re-designated in today's action, to further disseminate disinformation. The Strategic Culture Foundation (SCF) is an online journal registered in Russia that is directed by the SV (State Security Service) closely affiliated with the Russian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. SCF is controlled by the SV's Directorate MS (Measures) and created false and unsubstantiated narratives concerning U.S. officials involved in the 2020 presidential election.
